次の英文を読んで、下記の問いに答えなさい。

(26点)

(A) Is it possible that, when it comes to foreigners, many Japanese people have an "allergic" reaction? One American, who is a long-time resident of Japan, thinks that this is the case. Since he commutes to work by train daily, he has many opportunities to see how Japanese interact with foreign people. In a recent newspaper article, he described some of his experiences on the train.

One morning he noticed that, although the train was full, the two seats next to him remained untaken. There were many passengers standing nearby, but nobody showed any interest in sitting in the two seats. He began to feel very uncomfortable, wondering if there was anything wrong with his appearance.

Then, however, one Japanese woman came and sat down in a seat next to him. She smiled at him when she sat down. (B) Perhaps she realized his discomfort and wanted to show that some Japanese are friendly toward foreign people. He said that he felt better, but in the days since then, seats next to him usually remain untaken. He also believes that some Japanese might be nervous about the possibility of being spoken to in English by a foreign person.

The man thinks a younger generation of Japanese is getting more used to interaction with non-Japanese people. He says he is hopeful that Japanese will gradually feel more at ease with people from other countries. However, he also notes that 【 on a daily life level, despite, Japan's internationalization, cultural exchange programs, has a long way to go, Japan's government, by, local governments, and, 】.
